Stacked Tables

Something you don't see too often: Stacked Picnic Tables.

Something else you don't see too often: People dumb enough to sit inside of such a structure:

4. You know why people are sitting on the structure? To give it weight to keep it stable so it won't blow over in a light wind.

18. Guys, this is perfectly safe. There are stays to keep the whole construction upright and the tables were spec built and are stronger than the normal Wal*Mart version. I'm sure the Dutch building inspection tested this and declared it safe, and those guys are not easy to deal with.
19. It actually is a "leftovers restaurant" where people can eat (for a fee) lunches prepared by a chef from ingredients harvested from various sources, partly products that otherwise would have been thrown away.

33. Actually, my high school physics class built a similar pyramid at our outdoor cafeteria. Well, six of us did. Late one Sunday night. We only had ten tables to work with, and no stays, but no one was injured.
